(BHM.142, R³), metal flaw within exergue on the reverse, very fine, extremely rare as a silver medal £120-150
 *ex Baldwin's vault

The medal has a connection with Jamaica as Beckford, whose father was Governor of the Island, was born there and his later wealth derived from his inherited plantations there. Beckford was famously a supporter of John Wilkes and the words of his outspoken reproof to George III, on the occasion of the City of London address to the king in 1770, are inscribed in gilt on his monument in the Guildhall. He was the builder of Fonthill Splendens [later Fonthill Abbey], and father of the profligate William Thomas Beckford.

- 1397 Henry IX, Cardinal York (1725-1807), a leather box containing a pair of copper medals, 1788, by G. Hamerani, struck on the occasion of the death of the Cardinal's brother Charles Edward Stuart, bust r., in vestments and cap, rev. Piety stands next to lion, the Vatican in the distance, 54mm. (BHM.282; Eimer 823; Woolf 73.1a), in (somewhat battered) fitted and silk-lined presentation case, with lid and interior lid showing faded inscriptions, medals about very fine (2) £400-600

The inscription on the lid, in the Cardinal's hand, reads 'Given by Cardinal York, last of the Stuarts Royal line to Col. J. Philips and Captain B. C. Philips, Coldstream Guards, Rome, 1802'. This very presentation set is recorded by the Colonel's nephew, the author Francis Charles Philips (1849-1921), in his book, My Varied Life (London, 1914), where he writes 'My uncle, Colonel James Philips, of the Coldstream Guards, and his brother, Captain Charles Philips, at the commencement of the last century, being on leave from their regiment, went to Rome. They there saw Cardinal York, the brother of Prince Charles Edward, and himself the so-called last of the Stuarts. They told him there were several members of their family who had been executed by the Duke of Cumberland in 1745 for fighting for his brother. The old man gave them a miniature of his brother and two large medals, one silver and the other bronze, bearing the inscription 'Henry the Ninth, King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, by the will of God but not by the will of men.' On the box containing the medals was written in the Cardinal's handwriting 'Given by Cardinal York, last of the Stuarts (royal line) to Col. J. Philips and Captain B. C. Philips, Coldstream Guards. Rome, 1802.' Alas, the silver medal has been replaced by a second copper example.

Wiggins tentatively ascribed this curious piece to Benkulen, partly on account of its weight, stating that it is possible it was struck for use in another of the Company's posts. The reverse inscription is not the same as the rest of the Benkulen series, but he noted that 'the contemporary copper cash of the Madras Presidency' (the most likely alternative) 'were of considerably less weight'.

The later type of balemark on this piece was introduced in 1702, indicating that it was issued after the above issues which are ascribed to 1687-95.
